IASA maintains very limited personal information about our members, which is generally located in the individual profile section of the IASA membership system. That information is controlled and available exclusively to other members of the association based upon the appropriate security clearance of each member.

Contact information that is gathered in conjunction with IASA events may be shared with exhibitors and sponsors of that event on a limited use basis. IASA provides for an opt-out option from electronic distribution of this information.

IASA distributes a series of broadcast messages to our members based upon their individually selected or perceived interest area(s). All broadcasts (other than informational broadcasts to registered attendees of our events) include an opt-out option from future broadcasts.

All financial information, shared by customers that make purchases over the internet, is controlled and safeguarded through the use of software designed to protect such information. Financial information is never maintained on any IASA database or file, and must be resubmitted with each transaction.
